Field of the Invention This invention generally relates to microcontrollers and microcomputers, and more specifically, to a control unit for controlling an individual module in an industrial controller and a method for controlling the same.

2. Background of the Invention

Industrial controllers are special purpose computers used for controlling industrial processes or manufacturing equipment. Under the direction of a stored program, the industrial controller examines a series of inputs reflecting the status of the controlled process and changes outputs affecting the control of the process. The inputs and outputs are typically manipulated via input and output (I/O) modules connected to the industrial controller. By way of example, an automated manufacturing process may require an industrial controller to control dozens of I/O modules. The I/O modules are used to measure or sense process variables related to the automated manufacturing process. The I/O modules, along with one or more controllers, are connected via a network to one or more host computers. The host computers receive data from the I/O modules and display that data on a user display, e.g., a touch panel. Further, the host computers receive stored or received software instructions that, when executed by one or more controllers, control the operation of the one or more I/O modules.
